

SOCIAL SCIENCES

Bachelor of Arts/Sciences in Social Sciences

The Bachelor of Arts/Science in Social Sciences is an interdisciplinary degree program that will help you understand human behavior. It prepares you with a general foundation across the social sciences, including history, political science, psychology, sociology, and anthropology. Majors give their study focus by completing their degree with a concentration in a particular field of interest.

Social analysis is the bedrock of this degree, providing students an opportunity to understand competing theories on social and cultural formation and organization. Public service is often best suited for majors who successfully master the communication and analytical skills embedded in this major. Nonetheless, the successful student will find that the training provided by this program will prepare them for a number of career paths and further study at the graduate level.

About the Program

Both the Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Sciences in Social Sciences programs at UHD are 120-hour-credit programs. Graduates of either program will also be able to:

- Apply specific social science theory to real-world situations, and recommend a best course of action.
- Demonstrate proficiency in empirical social science research.
- Effectively write generalizations, and weigh conflicting evidence in their writing.

Because of the breadth of content, the BA in Social Sciences program is best suited for students who are seeking a strong liberal arts education. Students in the BA program need to complete 14 hours in foreign language and specific culture courses.
